Foreword

● Weequahic, it is with the deepest regret that we say goodbye. Words are inadequate when we attempt to express our emotions at this parting; all the phrases used by countless others on similar occasions seem empty and futile. However, years later, when we peruse these pages for the nth time we shall say again—as we do now—"Thank you for all the cherished memories you have given us!"

Winfield L. Hartman

Dedication

● The class of June 1937 is indeed fortunate in having as senior class adviser, Mr. Winfield Hartman, whose kindly influence and generous counsel have done much in guiding our journey of four years.

In his own patient and steadfast way, he has directed the fundamental influences on our school life, and thus has won our sincere regard and respect.

Therefore, we the Senior Class, wish to dedicate this, The Legend, to our friend and adviser, Mr. Winfield L. Hartman.

Max J. Herzberg

Walter White
Assistant to Principal

● It is often remarked that we are never conscious of a machine when it functions efficiently; only when there is trouble do we become aware of it. This observation can be applied to schools, also. Therefore, it compliments Weequahic High School that the students are not aware of the complications involved in the functioning of a large school. This efficiency can be entirely credited to the capable supervision of the executive department under Mr. Herzberg and Mr. White. As heads of that department, they deserve all praise for their splendid work in so capably directing a new school with all its concomitant difficulties. We, the Senior Class, express our sincere appreciation not only of Mr. Herzberg's executive ability, but also of the guidance he has given us, both academically and socially. We are deeply grateful to our principal and our faculty for the understanding and sympathy they have displayed, and we hope that in our future life we will be equally fortunate in our friends and instructors.

In Which An Indian Wills His Wiles

● The old Indian's slow, dignified approach stirred me from my drowzed submission to the June day's tepid heat. As I glanced to his bent, impotent form, I realized that Chief Weequahic had suddenly grown old. Motioning him to a chair, I winced at the slow care with which he lowered his painted body into it. As he sat meekly rubbing a trembling hand I saw little semblance to the spirited warrior of other days. There was none of the old bravado, the power, the famed shrewdness which had made the name Weequahic a feared battle-sign throughout the area. In mock replacement was a tired man with undefiant shoulders and trembling hands; an old Indian past his time, with blurred war-paint and a faded shawl. I listened hopefully for his strident voice. I heard a soft—no, not soft, subdued,—the Chief could speak in echoes and still be heard for limitless miles—voice calmly heralding his death. Both of us felt Death's oppressive presence; the Chief challenged it calmly; my duty was merely to listen to his last will and testament.

"I and my warriors and squaws", mused the venerable veteran, "have not many moons left before we are called to the Supreme Chief's reckoning. Our days have been happy ones, and we wish to pass on our experiences to the papooses soon to take up our treasured arms. Listen then, to the gifts we leave behind, and award them to our successors."

Brave Robert Besch, most intrepid and modest of our clan, presents his quiet power to Edith Hirshcoff, who may find some use for this quality. Fleet Charles Wosnitzer would will his common sense and lack of self esteem to Paul Silverman. Sage Stanley Goodman offers his nimble wit to panther-like Dave Fast, who smiles only in victory. Honor warrior Jerome Fechtner bestows his innocence upon the worldly form of Elliot Schecter. Gracious Mathilda Fox surrenders her prestige as one of our tribe's most acceptable females to lovely Roberta Roth . . . there is a likely squaw; were it that my days are not decreed as ended . . . Fierce Beatrice Kaplan sadly gives over her war-dance technique—waltz, fox trot, swing, et al—to lithe Jean Ornstein; the lithe one has been trucking in and out of her cradle of late.

Admirable Edwin Herbst shows his fine scholastic record and leaves the secret formula to Sol Brody—who is certain that some dire forces have been keeping the secret from him. Andrew Scott sorrowfully parts with his lovely squaw, Dorothy Rowe, who must remain within the confines of our tribe. Young braves, need I say more? Janet Barkhorn places her splendid name in the confident hands of brother Charles . . . his is not an enviable task. Norma Cohen leaves her many clubs to the tender care of Bert Levinstone.

Charles Lind laughingly offers his good-humored way of life to Seymour Mullman; Seymour's affability is a tribal legend. Irwin Taurig—whose universal popularity has never been questioned—shyly passes on his unsought repute to Seymour Masin—another violet who would rather blush unseen. Morton Solomon regretfully presents his fastidiousness—Morton's color schemes belittle even Esquire—to Edgar Simon, who has much to learn. Gerald Blum leaves his youth, and the attainments therein, to Ira Lentz, who claims to have a mortgage on our tribal lands. Marvin Frankel grandly dedicates to all aspiring law-beaters his assumed ability to impede the forces of Justice. Capable Phyllis Fieldman places her beloved book-tending duties in the eager hands of Helen Kaplan. Eugene Ferdinand, in solemn passing, extends his surging confidence to Albert Schraeger, who does have creditable potentialities.

There are many others, many more loyal followers, who must also join our tragic caravan in June. They too, would will their respective attributes to our youthful successors. I need not mention every name; the records that they have made, the standards that they have set, remain as an undying monument of their work. Their spirit is infused in every corner of our fine grounds. These other warriors—these papooses being groomed into our places—have but to breathe the air and they will have acquired the courage and convictions which have always guided the glories of our tribe. That glory is their heritage—for us there is a greater glory. For us there is another world, new opponents, sterner struggles—glory."

The old Indian has spoken. His stoic philosophy would not admit to sentiment; to escape from the tragic truth of his words he resolutely rose and walked to the door. Before going forever into the soothing twilight shades he turned for one last salute.

These words were the last that I ever heard from my aged friend. The last thoughts of a valiant Chief.

"Watch over our red-skin brood. Let their duty be found in the continuation of our ideals. The ideals with which I bid you farewell."

By ADRIAN CHARLES SPIES.

"Open Sesame"

By GERALD BLUM

● Ali Baba opened the cave of the robbers with these words. I shall open the portals of the future and reveal some of the mysteries therein.

The lights are low. I gaze intently into my crystal and slowly utter these words: "open sesame." Your tongue is in your cheek, but you must admit you are a bit curious. Skeptic that you are, your eyes suddenly roll in bewilderment. A faint image is appearing in the crystal. It is becoming clearer and clearer. Your tongue reverts once more to its normal position. You bite it in your excitement. There before you is a clear picture of the White House. Who is that emerging? He seems familiar. Of course, it's carrot-topped Martin Fisher. Who's that with him? You know him too. It's good ole Morty Bohrer in the garb of a Supreme Court judge.

The picture fades. Another reappears. It is a great laboratory. Seated at his desk completing his perpetual motion machine is none other than Mendel Bernstein. Great work, Mendel . . .

Again the picture fades. Now we see a magnificent ballroom. Morton Solomon is gliding hither and thither making his guests comfortable. He's formal, too . . . Who is Marvin Facher dancing with? Why, it's Mathilda Fox. Who's that cutting in? You guessed it! It's Dr. Orloff. He's a doctor when he finds time . . .

The scene changes once more. A Hollywood set appears. Vito Russo is doing his stuff. Get hot, Vito . . . Well, look who's here! It's Jerome "Red" Reisberg in stripes. Don't be alarmed. He's only rehearsing for his new picture "Crime Doesn't Pay," co-starring Mildred "Pussy" Katz. By this time your eyes are fairly popping out. Are these the kids you knew at high school?

Now you see a school room. Sure enough, there's Phyllis Fieldman teaching French. Mais oui . . . Next door, Miss Skipit is speaking on Chaucer. And a little further down the hall is Adrian Spies discussing the importance of psychology in modern life. Still at it, Adrian? . . .

Got a toothache? There's Sandy Lewis sticking his hand down Police Chief Besch's throat. Humph, he thinks he's Baron Munchausen . . . Blum? Oh, he's still in school. Child Labor Amendment was passed, you know . . .

A radio station next appears. There's Norm Gold introducing that one-man band, Stanley "Tuba" Goodman as Llewellyn Kretchmer looks on with three roses in his hand. Swing it, Stan . . . Next on the program is Adeline Kaplan, who speaks on the rise of woman in modern life. And now Seymour Facher is interviewing those two great athletes, Charley Wosnitzer and Aaron Posner, both of whom competed in the last Olympics. Great work, boys . . .

Again the scene changes. Shuya Kaufman is working away at the editor's desk trying to get the evening paper out on time as his ace reporter, Eugene Ferdinand, rushes in with a "scoop."

Now a college classroom appears. There's Seymour Fenichel lecturing on "The Importance of Being Earnest." He means it, too . . .

In My Mind's Eye--And Even Hamlet, the King of Melancholy, Could not be More Morbid

● Amid the beaten groans of a weary world our synthetic curtain sighs in wasted remorse and allows itself to be raised (or parted if my readers are members of the conservative school). Our apprehensive eyes are greeted with the pretentious lobby of the Indian Inn, retreat of Society's renowned reprobates. There are glass chairs, gold ferns, mirrored bars, and even an orchestra, under the inspiring guidance of swing king Kornet Kestner. This master of melody is leading his musicians—Kestner's Krimson Konkerors by name—through a medley of current annoyances as a prim couple add their dubious adornment to the other features of the set. They walk to the reception desk with the assurance which tells of breeding and worldliness. The man speaks:

Mr. Horowitz: I say, have you accommodations for the wife and myself?

Clerk (known as Lew Kretchmer in the servants quarters): Well, we are a bit crowded . .

Mr. Horowitz (slightly perturbed): But what are crowds to me? I am Emanuel Horowitz.

Clerk: Surely not the Emanuel Horowitz, the great Sociologist?

Mr. H. (Calmly readjusting his pince nez): Rather.

Clerk (with emotion): Ah.

(Mr. H. coughs modestly).

Clerk (pointing to Mrs. H.): And this is . . . .

Mr. H.: My dear wife, Natalie Reich, the voice of America's lovelorn women.

Clerk (with gestures): Ah, - - - Ah.

Mr. H.: Now that I have reluctantly made myself known, will you tend to our baggage?

Clerk: We have a very excellent baggage master, ah there is our genius now. (He proudly summons a grimy, sweaty man of labor who has been standing quietly in a forgotten corner.)

Clerk: Orloff, get your crew together.

Orloff (respectfully): I'm sorry Mr. Kretchmer, but my crew is not in good working shape today.

Clerk: Have Lewis and Blum gotten themselves involved with those wild women again.

Orloff (saddened by an inevitable truth): Yes sir, it seems that the women simply won't let my boys do an honest day's work.

Clerk (with an officious sigh): And who are the luring tempters this time?

Orloff (blushing at this close contact with the sordities of life): Those fast city women, Mildred Henkle and Genevieve Skipit.

Clerk: Ah yes I know them well . . . . However, Mr. Horowitz wishes his baggage attended to. See if you can find some help.

Orloff: I'll get some of the members of my club.

Mr. H. (the sociologist in him is awakened): Eh - - club?

Orloff: Yes, you see I am always joining clubs in my spare time, it does give one finesse.

Clerk: Well go along Orloff, and get Mr. Horowitz attended to, he's famous you know.

Orloff (as he makes a majestic exit): What is fame, I had it once . . . .

Clerk: And now - - ah, here is our manager. Good morning Mr. Goodman. (Enter Stanley Goodman, manager of the Indian Inn.)

Goodman: Mr. Horowitz I believe.

Mr. H.: If you had read my latest thesis you would have known that people do not believe—they merely experience reflex actions.

Goodman: How true, pearls of wisdom, grains of finely collected learning - - - how long are you staying?

Mr. H.: How long? Time? Staying? If you had read my last - -

Goodman: Yes, yes, of course. Now folks I'm going to call my social director, Marvin Facher. (He pushes a marble button.) This Facher is a treasure. He knows everybody. (Facher glides sweetly up to the desk).

Facher: You sent for me Mr. Goodman?

Goodman (fondly): Ah yes dear boy, I want you to arrange some entertainment for the Horowitzes.

Facher (coily): "A" entertainment or "B" entertainment?

Goodman: Come now Facher, these people are super-intellectuals.

Facher: Oh these intellectuals, so charmingly innocent.

Goodman (confidentially to Horowitz): I told you that he was a perfect treasure.

Mr. H.: Treasure? If you had read my last thesis - -

Goodman: Facher, bring on your performers!

Facher (shy but steady): Well first I would like our visitors to see our Bellhop parade. Summon the Bellhops, Kretchmer.

(Kretchmer pushes an emerald button. In a moment Kestner's Krimson Konkerors burst into a martial strain and from an elegant entrance come the Bellhops).

Goodman (as his prides pass grandly in review): Fine marching, boys. Chest out Vogel. Head forward, Bernstein. Ease up, Scott. Slower, Cohen. You're out of step, Ferdinand.

(Having received the personal greetings of their commander the Bellhops pass enraptured from our midst).

Mrs. H.: Some of those boys were awfully cute.

Mr. H.: Cute? Slang! If you had read my last - -

Mrs. H. (After all, she's lived with him for twenty years): And how is your cuisine, Mr. Goodman?

Goodman: Easily the finest in the world. Why our head cook, Mildred Katz - -

Mrs. H.: Not Mildred Katz of radio recipe fame.

Goodman: But of course.

Mrs. H.: You must be thrilled.

Goodman: I can't say that I am.

Mrs. H.: But she's so famous, she's cooked for kings.

Goodman: Yes lady, but I married her.

Mrs. H.: Oh, married to a cook-book.

Mr. H.: Married to a book, fancy that.

Mrs. H. (with an unbecoming smirk): Yes, fancy that.

Facher (who has had long practice at stifling domestic quarrels in the core): And now I should like to present our dancers. Back in the conventional years, they were sneeringly called gigolos and gigolettes. (He claps his hands and is immediately acknowledged by the entrance of two sylph-like couples, who dance up to the desk and introduce themselves thusly:

First Dancer: People call me Dapper Dan Weiss,
 Goodman pays me to dance and entice.

His partner: My friends call me Wini Craig,
 But old men call me their last leg.

Second dancer: My partner's name is Kathleen Pallitta,
 Say the discreet word, and I'll have you meet her.

His Partner: My partner is known as jumping Joe Blum,
 He's a dancing kid, watch him zoom.

(Dancers leave.)

Mr. H.: Not bad, but tell me, who is that quiet looking chap sitting by himself by the door.

Goodman: Ah, there is a man of genius. He is Aaron Posner, the inventor of a perpetual motion machine.

Facher: People say he's queer.

Mr. H.: I second the motion.

Goodman: Mere talk. The Indian Inn has an impeccable patronage.

(At this point the celestial calm of the establishment is shattered by a well pitched scream—it hits high C—from the second floor. The performers are still—a tableau of suspense. Suddenly a blood drenched man—a Mr. Herbst—staggers through the lobby).

Mr. Herbst: Cancel my reservation, I'm leaving this monument of sin.

Goodman: Sin, sir? That's libel!

Mr. Herbst: Love has caused me to wallow in murder.

Goodman: Murder, sir? That's illegal!

Mr. Herbst: She said she loved me.

Goodman: Ah, women lie so easily.

Mr. Herbst: She tricked me, but there was no weakness in me. I killed her—(a bit proudly)—my first killing too. Well I've had enough of this bloody baseness, I'm going back to my slaughter house where a man's a man for a' that and a' that. (He walks to the end of lobby and turns for one last enjoiner). The body - - -

Goodman: Think no more of it, Indian Inn service you know. (The killer stalks out).

Mr. H.: I must mention this in my next lecture.

Goodman: I'm sorry that you didn't have a better look at it. We usually provide special peepholes for our guests.

(There is an officious tramping of feet as Inspector Besch enters).

Besch: I hear that there was a killing.

Facher: Yes, terribly amusing, and unrehearsed too.

Besch: Has the killer left?

Goodman: Yes, I hated to see him go.

Besch: Oh shucks, and I did want his autograph.

Goodman: Perhaps we can arrange another murder for you.

Besch: Would you? - - - But that is too much to ask.

Goodman: Not at all, you know the proverb, a killing a day keeps the doctor away.

Besch: Here come the newspapermen. What callous revelists!

(Enter the gentlemen of the press).

Scoop Tenenbaum: Howdy everyone, was it a nice murder?

Mrs. H.: A little messy, I thought.

Mr. H.: My dear, you're hardly an expert.

Goodman: Ah, but she'll learn. The Indian Inn, the great home of education.

Facher (to Tenenbaum): Who is that demure little thing in the corner?

Tenenbaum: Oh I'm sorry folks, murder dulls the edge of etiquette. Meet Norman Gold the sob sister of our paper.

Gold: Oh Murder! Oh Blood! Oh wicked world!

Goodman: Well I'm expecting some other notables today—Morton Bohrer, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, and Adrian Charles Spies, that famous playwright.

So I'll leave you to your own devices. Make the Indian Inn your home.

Gold (in something like an echo): Oh wicked world!

Tenenbaum: Oh blood!

Facher: Oh murder!

CURTAIN

Audience: Oh.

What's this? A door—Why, it says Andrew H. Scott and Erwin J. Fast, Attorneys-at-Law-and-Other-Matters. Someone's opening the door. It's Emanuel Horowitz inquiring how his suit for Natalie Reich's hand is coming along . . . Fast removes his feet from the desk, lays down his cigar, and shrugs his shoulders, while Andrew H. (Great) Scott turns a page of the latest novel by that great satirist, Henry "Swift" Vogel. Can't quite make out the title, Oh yes, it's "On Combing One's Hair." Miriam Rubinstein is conscientiously recording in Greek everything that is taking place. My, what energy . . . .

Another change of scenery. There's Seymour Kobetz collecting tickets at the circus entrance. Ah, the show is on! Something familiar about those clowns . . . Sure enough, there's Gene Weiss introducing those famous comic acrobats, Ernest Baldwin, Mike Cheica, and Herbert "Red" Horowitz. Look who they're bringing in The big act of the "Big Top" . . . Ed Cohen tickling a pink elephant. What a sense of humor! . . . .

Water appears. A great ocean liner plods wearily along its way. Alex Teitelbaum, internationally known playboy, bought the ship for a little cruise around the world . . . On deck, Norma Cohen, Phyllis Eisen, and Florence Bodner seriously discuss living conditions in Dahomey, while at the bar, Edwin Herbst and Herman Tenenbaum clink glasses to the merry past. Drink it down, boys . . . .

Jerome Fechtner, the absent-minded professor, is next seen trying to open the door to his room with a trusty, old Honor Society Key . . .

Suddenly the lights flash on again. So it wasn't real after all! But I notice your eyes are still large and that tongue isn't in your cheek.

LITERARY

"Merrily We Roll Along"

● Let us, fellow students, forget for a moment the traditional pessimism which has been an integral part of every high school commencement. Let us forget the muttered instructions and age-worn admonitions that have sent every graduate into the world, wondering what awful inferno awaits his wary tread.

We have been told that we are young, inexperienced, and an easy prey for the cruel civilization into which we are about to be sacrificed. We have been warned to be constantly on the watch for evil and its manifestations, but we have not been told to seek the good, the beautiful and the kind. We have not been inculcated with the principles of optimism and hope.

There is no difficulty involved in presenting vividly the varied evils and temptations which undoubtedly are omni-present in the wide, cold world. Of course these warnings must not be cast aside contemptuously. It has been said that evil is its own disguise—and accordingly it is doubly difficult to avoid. Those who would have us constantly on our guard, fearful and anticipant of every ominous murmur, have no doubt the best of intentions. There are many factors, however, that they fail to consider. We high school graduates are not going to some distant planet where we would be utterly alone; we are not stepping out of our present environment in the same motion with which we step past our classroom door. There are many among us who will attend institutions of higher learning where knowledge, age, and experience will more fully prepare us to face the world and defy its most malevolent intentions.

And those of us who intend to enter some business venture, those of us who find it necessary to seek employment, we are no more faced with a "cold, cruel world" than our more studious classmates. We are still at home, still in the bosom of our families, and still able to fall back, if necessary on our loved ones for moral or material aid.

A world utterly devoid of evil would be a Utopia—a most marvellous place indeed. But as long as humanity and human nature endures such a situation would be utterly impossible. On the other hand—a society entirely without good would be equally impossible. There is always the "happy medium" which maintains the balance.

It is for us to realize therefore, that for every dark and foreboding spectre which crosses our path, a clear and shining image will follow. We must remember that as the clouds roll past, the sun makes itself apparent in all its glory.

Let us, then, face the world with a feeling of confidence and the will to succeed. Let us consider our prospects as being fundamentally good instead of overwhelmingly bad. We must cast aside the pessimism and fearful admonitions that have always beset the graduate, and "merrily roll along" into the great adventure which lies beyond.

S. LEWIS

Intrigue

By JACK ORLOFF.

The world is yours to win,
He said,
There are chances all around.

Your life is made for you,
He said,
To no one are you bound.

He trudged along the dreary lane,
With head held high and eyes aflame.
And looked as if no one could do
To him some harm, his will subdue.

You can't go wrong with me,
He said,
I'll teach you all I know.

I'll let you learn some tricks,
He said,
And then I'll let you go.

How good and worthy are the brave.
How proud and haughty, the coward slave.
'Tis men like them who us do lead,
To glory one, to shame, the other breed.

And now my little friend,
He said,
I'll take you to my home.

And when I get you there,
He said,
I'll show you where to roam.

'Tis sure the one who went with him
In time did learn of every sin.
Life holds wealth for some such boys,
But to the good come life's true joys.

Shining Armor

● The proverbial "gold spoon" was no where in evidence when Merjus was born and he was looked upon as "just another mouth to feed". He was the youngest of seven children and from the first was nick-named ugly. Unlike his brothers and sisters who were fair, with varying shades of light hair and blue eyes, Merjus was dark, with a warm shade of olive complexion and black eyes. His nose stood out in sharp contrast to his large forehead, and the dilated nostrils revealed the sensitiveness of the boy's nature. A large mouth, though narrow, contrived to disguise a smile that played about his lips, as if secretly laughing at those about him, and finding much amusement in sharing his secret with no one. The jaws were set, and yet his chin, with a delicate cleft that only enhanced his appearance, stood out in sharp relief, as if the gods had played a prank in their final touch.

Unusually tall for his age, he was admitted into the primary grade at school when he was six. Destiny showed her cards at an early age, for, as he stood apart from his family, in school he was a lonely child. For as long as he could remember no one had shown him any kindness; not even his mother, who looked upon him as some kind of curse. Indeed the neighbors would often whisper and sometimes audibly, so that the child, wondering wherein he had sinned, encircled himself in a world of his own and failed to return friendly advances from other children.

Children can be very cruel, and the fact that Merjus by far and away was the smartest in the class, only served to lend to their taunts a bitter sting and the child was utterly miserable. Even the teacher, accustomed to "problem children" of one type or another, tried to draw him out and was rewarded for her efforts with a silence she misconstrued.

While his brothers and sisters played about the house after school hours, Merjus had numerous chores to perform. His thin legs dragged along as he carried wood into the house, or performed some menial task, and the laughter of the children wounded him deeply as they shared their games with one another. His mother, too, expected much of him, and if it ever occurred to her that he was just a child, she remembered that he was ugly, and secretly wished that he would be no more.

As he grew older his mind became analytical and he began to understand many things. His family—were they different—or was he? Surely they were his brothers and sisters, and surely that was his Mother and Father, and yet—why were they so different? He thought of the word adoption as it might apply to himself, but he quickly discounted this theory. They needed no other children; there was barely sufficient to feed the large brood. Many times he had gone hungry, that someone else might eat. He thought about the word "different" and sought its meaning from the dictionary. Different he found—"set apart", "unlike", yes; that was it. He was set apart; they were one and he was one—alone!

An innate love of books was his greatest solace, and he read anything and everything that chanced to come his way. Stolen minutes were spent at the library, where he grasped any book available. When his chores were finished, he would steal to a quiet retreat and turn back the pages of time. Knights in armor, kings and princesses in their palaces were a never ending source of wonder to the boy. In his dreams at night he was transplanted into a world where he walked with knights of old, and he too wore a shining armor. It was a world where he was no different from anyone else, where people loved him and took him to their hearts.

An old copy book, very precious to him was concealed at the bottom of a store closet that was rarely visited, and a source of delight was his little notations about the stories he read. No one had ever seen the book, and he guarded it jealously, lest someone accidentally come upon it and make sport of him. The notations were wistful yearnings of a little lost soul and revealed the emptiness of his heart. They were to find it later, and instead of laughing in derision, they would cherish it as a precious memento left by the boy they called ugly, but who had beauty of soul.

Awakened before dawn, he would rub his tired eyes, and away would vanish the glitter of "his other life" as he termed it, and the realization of his earthly life wearied him. There were many things to be done, while his brothers and sisters slept, before it was time for school. He dressed hurriedly and wished desperately that somehow he might never have to awaken, so that he could go on dreaming. His wish was sister to fact.

Clad in a shabby sweater handed down from his eldest brother, he started off to school. The day was bitter cold and a heavy snow had fallen during the night. Streets were barely passable, and pedestrians made their way cautiously, puffing along in the slow progress of reaching their destinations. Carrying his books under one arm, he sought to protect his other hand from the stinging cold by slipping it between the buttons of his sweater. As he advanced upon the main thoroughfare, a book slipped out and fell to the ground. Unmindful of his surroundings, he hastily stooped to retrieve it. He remembered the violent clang of a horn, then he felt as if the whole world had tumbled upon him and he knew no more . . .

A voice from somewhere penetrated into his unconscious being; a voice strangely familiar, yet somehow different. A voice that usually rasped when it addressed him; now strangely tender. "My son," said the voice that trembled with tears. And that was all he heard; but he smiled, trying to make them understand everything was right—at last—for there stood his Knight, wearing a "Shining Armor," with arms outstretched, reaching to welcome him into the land of dreams from which there is no return.

Night

By JACK ORLOFF.

The night is long as a maiden's silky hair.
As beautiful to me as the shimmering pond
When stars and moon above into it shine.
All nature seems to stop when it arrives,
And not to rest from cares of day,
But upon her fairer sister's nudity
To gaze, enraptured by its holy charms.
Would that the night of life were a softer black,
Could do as nature's night and turn to day
When all is lost and hope no more remains.

Death Takes A Holiday

● The horror of this situation weighed heavily on his mind. He could not see a thing—he was in total darkness. He heard a weird, high-pitched laugh, and realized dully that it came from his own lips. Oh, God! how would this end? The silence was oppressive—it clamped down on him and foretold of dire evil. It was this endless waiting for the unknown, the deadly fear of the climax of this night of torture. If he only knew what the next move of those fiends would be—but he could not know. He had already learned with what lightning-like speed they struck.

He would stand it no longer. His desire to get out of the place was stronger than his pride and honor. Let the world, in its ignorance, mock him. What did the others know—those who had never had such a curse befall them. Suddenly a shrill scream rent the air. Completely bathed in cold perspiration, he rushed to his feet, but to his complete horror, he realized that he could not move his legs. Almost succumbing to unconsciousness, he got control of himself in the nick of time, and slumped down again on the cold floor. Scarcely alive to the world, he examined the condition of his legs, and to his complete dismay, found fastened around his ankles a heavy chain. He was doomed! He wondered vaguely what Death was like - - - -

It was at this point that a glaring light brought him to his senses. It came from a searchlight, held by one of those hooded demons whom he had already learned to fear. There were about ten of them, and every one was completely hidden in a black cloak and hood. Not a sound was made. His fate had, evidently, already been decided. "I'll show them how a brave man dies," he muttered, as he felt strong arms grasping him, and others placing a blindfold over his eyes.

He groaned at this rough treatment, for only a brief glance was necessary to see the bruises and welts which had been inflicted earlier in the evening. In his state of semi-coma, he could not comprehend what was happening. He was finally recalled from his reveries by the sharp command to get out. It was then, for the first time, that he realized he was in an automobile. He tremblingly obeyed, dully realizing that his legs were once more free. He was directed to stay there until he received further orders. The car immediately went ahead, leaving him behind.

His heart surging with hope, he tore off the blindfold and realized that he was in the neighborhood of his own home. With a sob, he fell to his knees and offered a brief thanks to the Almighty. He then got up and wearily walked home.

Two days later, his mother handed him an envelope addressed to him. He eagerly took out the letter and read the following: "Having satisfactorily undergone the tests prescribed by the "Kappa Delta" Fraternity, you may consider yourself a full fledged member. You will be notified about our next meeting."

Looking Back

● As we of the graduating class stand on the threshold of a new period in our lives, we cannot help but look back on the last four years without the suggestion of a tear or two. In our later life we shall no doubt remember our high school days as being among the happiest we have ever lived through.

As we think back over these few years, there are certain highlights which stand out most impressively. We can well remember the thrill we got when we first entered Weequahic High School. How awed we were at the long rows of lockers—at the sheer beauty of the entire building! And then the first football game, the insuppressible pride we had in our boys as well as in the band—defeat, spelling gloom for all, and victory the cause of universal joy. We didn't mind the jibes of those in the higher classes, for we well knew that soon we would be haughty sophomores with the same sophisticated air.

As we began to "learn the ropes" of high school life, some of us turned to athletics, others to the various clubs—in all prevailed a friendly rivalry coupled with beautiful friendships. Throughout this period we were all undergoing a great change in life—we were leaving our childhood forever behind, and in its stead, there existed young manhood and young womanhood. Together with this metamorphosis, we were gradually becoming extremely conscious of our personal appearance. Social contacts with members of both sexes were formed, and for this end the school dances were an invaluable incentive.

But not all has been fun and frolic. We all took a keen interest in our grades, no matter how strongly some of us try to deny it. This interest demanded quite a bit of our time—those that gave this willingly have become the "scholars", those who have begrudged it, have not. Each one of us has been, and still is, associated in the minds of his classmates by his actions and achievements. There are the teacher's pets, the athletes, the good students, and the class babies. The importance of this opinion that the others have of you can hardly be over-estimated, for the name you earn for yourself in high school will probably be the same as that which you will bear all your life. Thus, it is pitiful indeed, that some of us have become known as poor sports and egotists, yet it is hard for the others to sympathize with them.

The senior year, very fresh in our minds, also had its share of thrills and disappointments. One of the big milestones in a boy's life was reached during this year—the right to drive his own car. It is the opinion of the majority that any nonchalance shown by a boy (or a girl, for that matter) when he drives a car for the first time is mere affectation. Furthermore, it has been in our senior year naturally, that most of us have reached the highest peak of our high school career, to attain which we had been steadily working during the other three years. Now as we are ready to be graduated, we who have tried, may feel certain that we have achieved as much as possible in our four years at Weequahic, and are prepared to continue to greater heights in college or in the business world.

The End of the Trail

● Four years in a tepee.

A big one at that. From a papoose to a full-grown brave (?). Scalps taken, scalps shaken. But it was fun.

Came in like a lamb, gone out like a lamb. Spent four years doing two things. One about the last. Another year acting that out. And what now? Start all over again. year thinking about the second. Another year acting it out. The third year thinking Enter with a certain feeling of awe and leave with the same feeling for the future. But I still say it was fun.

First year, papoose wasn't so brave. Elevator tickets were expensive and great, big people quite menacing. Caught in a stampede one day. Still black and blue. Latin Greek. Teachers like Great Spirits. Papooses like "deers." Hunting grounds not so happy. All corners look alike. One good thing. Running after rooms good for feet. Report-card day like Great Salt Lake. Very salty. Many sleepless nights. Suppose clock stops? It didn't.

Second year. One down and three to go. Papoose growing up. Big thrill. Got name in Calumet. Took a buffalo to get it in, though. Realized that lunch period has forty-five minutes. Digestion improved. Tried to exercise "divine right of sophomores to plague freshmen" but freshmen were too big. Can't act freely. Sagamores big too. First glimpse of Shakespeare. Heap clever fellow. Knew how to "quill." Teachers not so Great for Spirits. Report-cards still salty. Corners still hazy but soles not so worn. Indian teams good but no scalps. Warriors on victory famine, ugh.

Third year, two down and two to go. Almost a brave, not quite. Freshmen getting smaller. Swaddling clouts will soon be in fashion. Latin "Gone With the Wind." Catching on to "How To Look Important." Cupid, the archer, strikes young braves hardest. Teachers fade from picture. One more jump to be big brave. Indians get good. Team and heads swell.

Fourth year, the end of the trail in sight. Big brave at last. Corners clear at last. "All's well with the world." Try to be model for little papooses. Then come late every other week. Arrived at goal but don't know what to do there. Unbury tomahawk but sagamores still big. Struck oil and raised enough wampum to graduate. Nose in air but brain in fog. Indian basketeters still on warpath. Who can stop 'em?

Now the end of the trail. Tough times. More to come. But I say it was fun.

GERALD BLUM.

Sports

● In the four years that it has been open, Weequahic has risen from an obscure position in sports to one of the leading figures in sports. This is true particularly in basketball and track. In our first year, the basketball team dropped every game on its schedule. From then on, Weequahic improved with every game and now an Indian quintet is sure to be one which is always a basketball leader in this state.

Our track teams, under the able direction of Coach Bill Rose, have always had good records since the opening of the school. Weequahic has had a strangle hold on the Junior City Championship for the last three years. Our Senior teams were second in the last City Meet by the small margin of two points, and this year our Indian tracksters are one of the favorites to capture both Junior and Senior City Track title.

The football team, coached by Art Lustig who is also the basketball mentor, has not kept up with the other sports. Weequahic, although coming out on the wrong end of the score in the majority of their games, is always known to put a fighting and courageous band of players on the field. The gridiron Warriors are known all over the State for their never-say-quit spirit, and in time to come such a spirit will reward those game youngsters out on the gridiron sporting those Orange and Brown colors.

Coach Schneider's baseballers have had fair seasons since the opening of this institution. Laboring under difficult conditions such as lack of proper equipment and the lack of a proper training field, our Indians have managed to maintain a .500 average on the diamond the past three years.

The Indian golf team provided Weequahic with its first State championship. In its first year, the varsity golf squad was tied with Asbury Park for the State golf title. Since the first season the material which greeted Coach Hartman has never come up to par and therefore the golfers have experienced plenty of defeats at the hands of their elder and more experienced opponents.

Coach La Penna's tennis team has provided him satisfaction in ending up with a better than average season since the organization of a tennis squad three years ago. The netsters have proved the saying that good things sometimes come in small packages by showing their backers that even if they were much younger, than their opponents they could come out on top.

The girls in the Senior Class have participated freely in all the outside athletic activities. Five of the girls are proud possessors of a Major "W", which was awarded them for outstanding ability. Because of these capable Seniors, Evelyn Crosson, Florence Kean, Dorothy Jacobs, Ruth Corby, and Peggy Stratton, the volleyball, archery, swimming, and horseback riding clubs were able to display very able athletic teams.

All in all, Weequahic in its four years as a Class IV high school has established itself as a distinct threat in all inter-scholastic athletics. Weequahic may well be proud of its outgoing Seniors for the fine record they have made in the past four years, and we outgoing Seniors may well be proud of Weequahic for the lesson it has taught us: Play the game for the game, and for nothing but the game.

The honor of being the outstanding athlete in the June, 1937, graduating class goes to blond Charles Wosnitzer. Probably the most popular athlete ever to don an Indian uniform, Charley has earned 6 major letters in his three year stay at Weequahic. In basketball, "Blondie's" real worth came forth this season when he paced a great Weequahic team to great heights. Playing in the backcourt, Charley directed the Warrior's offense flawlessly, and on top of that played a still better defensive game. Again in baseball, Wosnitzer's steadying influence kept the baseballers always in the game. This 5 foot 4 inch youngster will be sorely missed not only as an athlete, but also as a student as well.

For four consecutive years the name of Meyer Parks has been written in the line-up of Weequahic's football teams. His play, although never spectacular, has never given Coach Art Lustig any worry about a capable pivot man. Meyer was a mainstay on the nine for one season and also participated in track.

You'd never get the impression that Adrian Spies is a footballer, but he can well take care of himself once on the gridiron. Ad, who was a hard worker and always gave all he had to the team, had his football career cut short by a broken ankle in the middle of the 1935 football season. Playing at tackle, the boy really learned how to take it.

Lanky Robert Besch was this class' contribution to the high jumping event on the track team. Bobby went out for track in his freshman year but was unable to earn a letter in the sport until his junior season. That season Besch was the squad's mainstay in the high jumping event. Coach Rose is certainly reluctant to see him go.

Actor, scholar, and athlete is Bernard Fink's distinction in this year's graduating class. Fink carried his likable manners to the hurdling and sprinting events on the track squad. A consistent point getter, Bernie was of high value to the tracksters. Again on the gridiron, Fink's cheerful spirit carried him to a varsity berth in the backfield of the football squad, but his bright football future was snapped with a broken collar bone sustained in his second varsity contest.

This is the story of a lad who tap danced his way into earning a varsity insignia. Vito Russo, probably the best dancer in the Senior class, simply put his feet into use and earned for himself letters in track and cross-country. In track Vito was the leading miler on the squad.

Until parental objection forced him to the sidelines, Jack Klueber was one of the leading cross-country runners in the city. Klueber, who was elected Captain this past season, but was forced to resign because of the reason mentioned above, was not only a valuable member of the cross-country squad, but a consistent point getter on the track team.

The hard luck boy of this year's graduates is Irwin Traurig. A jayvee star on the quintet last year, Irwin was promoted to the varsity squad this season and was all ready for a starting berth when he gave his ankle a severe twist and was out for several days. During those days Coach Lustig discovered another starter and Irwin couldn't remove him from the lineup. But whenever Coach Lustig needed a capable substitute, reliable Traurig was waiting for the call.

Coming to the front in his Senior year is the experience of Aaron Posner. Now a reliable miler on the track team, and a former cross-country star, Aaron has earned for himself through his four years of high school three major letters.

No matter whether he was a star or not to Phil Grabenchik goes the honor of making every varsity team he has tried out for. The two varsity teams are football and track. Never making the headlines, Phil was just satisfied with earning his varsity letters.

The hurdling championship of the city of Newark in 1937 belongs to Lawrence Klein. The most reliable member of Coach Rose's tracksters Larry will sorely be missed when the next track season rolls along.

The managers of the Senior class are Erwin Fast and Jerome Reisberg. "Buddy" managed the cross-country squad in his junior year while "Red" took care of the track squad the same year.
